How They Do It

Up to one o'clock 77 families had been supplied with food by the ladies' committee. They have been supplied with poi, stew, hard bread, sugar, tea, condensed milk and fuel which are taken home. The women of each family are invited to come for the supplies needed.

Death of Everett.

An honest man, a true kamaaina has crossed the stream of Styx. Thomas W. Everett, ex-Governor of Maui, a most esteemed servant of the Government of Hawaii has paid his dues to grim death and is no longer among us.

Tom Everett died on the 5th day of September at his residence in Waikapu, Maui. He had passed the three score and ten, and during his long stay here he was able to look back to a clean life, supported at all times by the admiration of his fellow citizens.

Tom Everett arrived here in 1849, on November 15th in the bark Memnon from San Francisco. He was born in Boston, Mass., and followed the gold fever prevalent in the latter part of the forties. For several years he was a trader and supplied whalers and others with the produce of the islands. He resided during those days in Honolulu and Lahaina, and with his partners owned the property now known as Ulupalakua from where potatoes, flour, wheat, corn and other necessities were produced.

After a while Tom Everett made Maui his permanent home. The Government of that day readily recognized his sterling qualities and he was appointed deputy sheriff of Maui, a position held by him for nearly thirty years.

In 1860 he married Nellie Richardson, a sister to the Circuit Judge of Maui, and lived in true happiness with her until her death a few years ago.

No issue blessed that union, but the deceased proved himself a father to a number of orphans related to his wife and now deploring his demise.

Tom Everett was a true New Englander. He was gruff and at times even rough, but nothing can better express the character of the man than the few words said by a former Hawaiian employee of the deceased last night to the editor of this paper. "Tom dead? True! An honest man is dead."

The "relief" ladies are working bravely and the Bethel-street hash house will be in shape to-night. A kitchen is being erected behind the building, and all arrangements have been perfected for the cooking of stew and tea. The containers will probably last two or three days before being burned out. The large iron vessel formerly used for cooking food for Portuguese immigrants, and now owned by Mr. Thos. Lucas, could be obtained without charge. They are far more suitable than the flimsy things now used and purchased from Mr. Emmeluth.
